How Cancer Insurance Works

Cancer insurance provides a payment for certain procedures and screenings related to an employee's cancer treatment. The benefit is paid directly to employees regardless of their medical insurance and can help relieve their financial burden during a time of stress. The payments can be used for any purpose such as:

- Copays, deductibles, or coinsurance for cancer procedures and treatments
- Experimental treatments not covered by health insurance
- Transportation to a specialized care facility or lodging
- Everyday expenses, like rent, mortgage, groceries, or other bills

Smart Way To Manage Growing Costs

Just as cancer diagnoses are increasing, so are the costs to treat them; cancer costs have been rising about 5 percent every year.² By offering cancer insurance, you can allow employees to find the resources they need to make recovery their priority, all while offering a comprehensive benefits package.

The current out-of-pocket cost for cancer treatment is $1,266 a month.¹
